Rural Health Study in Virginia

(Editor's note: This is the sixth in a series of articles on rural health in Virginia).

Blackburg.- Mental-emotional illness is as great a problem as physical illness—a fact many people either apparently forget or ignore.

A report on "The Road to Health in Rural Virginia: 1900-1952" by Dr. W. E. Garnett, rural sociologist at VPI, points out that about one person in 20 develops mental disorders requiring institutional care; about one family in five has some member afflicted with mental or emotional disorders serious enough to interfere with well-being or social adjustment; nearly half of hospital beds are needed for mental patients; and about half the general medical practitioner's patients come to him with symptoms related to emotional disorders.

Virginia, the study relates, spends many millions per year in support of its institutions for the mentally ill, with many additional millions from time to time for new mental institution facilities. Of even greater significance are the immeasurable costs of family maladjustments and conflicts, unhappiness and suffering, Dr. Garnett says.

In 1952, the five mental hospitals in Virginia had under their care 16,056 patients, of whom 2,002 were first admissions. The two colonies for the mentally deficient cared for 2,992, of whom 309 were first admissions. Virginia's per capita expenditure ($560.46 in 1951) for keeping hospital patients fell below that of 39 states.

The director of the State Department of Mental Hygiene and Hospitals in his 1951 report said if the most approved methods of treating the mentally ill could be fully used, over 60% of the mentally disturbed admitted to state hospitals for the first time could be returned to their homes within six months. He adds that this would require additional trained personnel, as well as improved facilities.

Needs in regard to increased staff as of June 30, 1952, are pointed up in the following figures: authorized doctors—50, actually employed—28; authorized nurses—182, actually employed—63; authorized attendants—1,642, actually employed—1,251. (This situation has since been slightly improved).

The present pay scale makes finding properly equipped personnel difficult, even though a fair number may be authorized, the study points out. Professionally trained people are especially hard to get.

On July 1, 1952, the mental hospitals had over 1,700 more patients than the rated capacity and the state colonies 461, or nearly a fourth more than they could properly care for. The latter had a waiting list of over 500. Facilities completed in the last year at the Lynchburg Colony have made possible the reduction of the waiting list.

In its program to prevent mental illness, the State Department of Mental Health and Hygiene carries on three types of activities: (1) the work of mental hygiene clinics, (2) educational work, and (3) the sterilization of certain types of cases.

A system of mental hygiene clinics is being developed, and 15 clinics have been established. They are located in Alexandria, Arlington, Charlottesville, Northern Neck, Petersburg, Richmond (3), Radford, Norfolk, Portsmouth, Roanoke, Fairfax, Lynchburg, and Williamsburg. They are supported by federal and state funds, supplemented by local funds from various sources. Treatment is free. Some of the clinics serve several counties, and to serve the whole state properly the number needs to be doubled. In 1952, the clinics gave help to 6,040 individuals. Some of them came of their own accord; others were referred by doctors, ministers, public welfare workers and judges.

The sterilization program is used in cases of feebleminded where the family history justifies it. The Virginia law permitting the sterilization operation was upheld by the United States Supreme Court in 1927. From then until December, 1952, a total of 6,172 sterilizations had been performed—fore than in any state except California.

Many mentally ill are treated as private patients at the departments of neurology and psychiatry of the state's two medical schools. Over 5,000 annually are treated for psychiatric or nervous disorders at the out-patient clinics of the two schools. Many are treated in private sanatoria.

The study reports friendly and cooperative relations between the Department of Health and the Department of Mental Hygience and hospitals. "However, reports from a number of local health departments indicate that, except where the health officers or nurses are especially interested in mental hygiene, needs in this field receive little emphasis. Progress in improving mental health is retarded by the lack of interest of local representatives. When public health work is mentioned people generally think of the activities of the State Health Department, and its affiliated local departments. They tend to over-look the fact that mental well-being is equally important," the study asserts.

GROUP ASKS FOR A GREATER TAXING POWER

The League of Virginia Counties renewed its plea for a state sales tax and asked for greater tax power for the counties in a meeting last week. Channing H. Moon, of Buckingham County, was reelected secretary of the organization.

The League's field secretary, William B. Speck, speaking at the opening session of the meeting, held in Charlottesville, blamed "powerful self-interest lobbies and state officials fo rrefusal to grant Virginia counties equal taxing power with cities."

He said that counties must provide many services provided by the cities, while not permitted to have equal taxing power.

W. L. Caldwell, a commissioner of the State's Division of Planning and Economic Development, told the delegates that counties must give more thought to providing police protection, water, sewer, trash and garbage service to thickly populated areas.

All but 17 of Virginia's 98 counties are represented in the League which, by resolution, again asked the General Assembly to enact a retail sales tax.

The delegates adopted a resolution stating that they were "unalterably opposed to integration in public schools."

MOSES PLEASED WITH COMMENTS ON THE 1955 CHEVROLET MODELS

One of the largest crowds ever to witness the showing of a new car here saw the new 1955 Chevrolet make its debut last week-end at the Moses Motor Co., according to C. T. Moses, local dealer. He said:

"We were pleased and proud at the public response to the new models. The complimentary comments of our visitors gave an enthusiastic stamp of endorsement to the all-new Chevrolet now on display in our show room. It was a great 'open house,' and we are still playing host to our friends who wish to inspect this great new car."

The local dealer's comments reflected national reports on the debut of the '55 Chevrolet, which was acclaimed by millions of car-conscious Americans who inspected the new model in show rooms across the country.

Virginia Ranks 11th In Ratio Of Farms Having Electricity

Virginia stands with Indiana in 11th place in the nation in the percentage of farms with electric service.

J. L. Calhoun, associate agricultural engineer at VPI, said a U. S. Department of Agriculture report shows the percentage of electrified farms in Virginia is well above the national average— 97% as compared to 92.3%. The report also shows that Virginia leads all southern states in the percentage of farms served with electricity. North Carolina ranks a close second with 96.9%.

The number of Virginia farms with electricity has more than doubled in less than 10 years, the accomplishment reflects credit upon the electric power suppliers in the state, Calhoun says.

He believes the great challenge ahead is for farm people to learn how to make the most efficient use of electric service. At the present time there are more than 400 uses of electricity in the home and on the farm.

But many farmers are not making the best use of them. For instance in spite of the availability of electric service only 40% of the farms have water system the most beneficial aids mad sible by electricity.

The condition of the chicken ing system on farms has often referred to as the bottleneck farm electrification progra houn says. Farmers are using electrical equipment that was templated at the time the ste tems were installed. As many wiring systems are ou ed, and electrical equipme not perform properly and ef ly. It has been estimated that of the nation's farmsteads tems are inadequate for the electrical load.

On poultry and dairy farms said that 3/4 of the labor is ed in and around the farm ings. Electrical equipme promise for greatly reducing t pendture of hand labor. It years, considerable researc has been done toward dev equipment that will reduc time on the farm.

CHURCH NEWS

METHODIST DISTRICT RALLY

Methodist District Rally will be held in the E. C. Glass High School auditorium on Sunday, Nov. 7, 3:00 P. M.

The rally is planned by the District Commission on Evangelism to arouse interest in the Methodist Church in preparation for the observance of the Methodist Church in Bedford District Institute on Evangelism, to be held at the First Church in Lynchburg Nov. 16-18. The institute was attended by members of the commission on evangelism from the local church and all the pastors in the district.

Plans for the program was a two day evangelistic effort in the Lynchburg churches, Oct. 17-31. This period will open to a week of visitation evangelism and a week of pulpit evangelism in a majority of the churches. The first two weeks in November will continue the program of visitation evangelism and will end with the evangelistic rally in each high school.

The Rev. Neff Garber, president of the Virginia Conference, will be the guest speaker at the rally and it is understood that his message will deal with several important aspects of the program of the Methodist Church. Dr. C. C. Bell, the District Superintendent, will preside and Dr. G. Jefferson, Conference Lay Leader, will lead the singing.
